EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Public-order risk this week is about operational tempo rather than a single headline event. It was shaped by student activism and strike / labour action, and Indonesia carries the heaviest concentration, with South Korea and Bangladesh as supporting watch areas. The most serious reached extreme, so this week is not routine.

What stands out is speed: these events move from notice to road closure, transit halt or site-access disruption inside a working day. The pattern is rapid escalation against a standing baseline of unrest, not isolated flare-ups.

For business users the implication is straightforward: protect staff movement, site access and continuity comms against short-notice disruption on the named cities. Refreshed journey-management plans, agreed escalation triggers and live country-lead routing do more work this week than headline-severity tracking.

ACTIVISM AND PROTEST READ

Across 14 Jun - 20 Jun 2026 the activism picture is led by "Women Protesters Push Past Police Blockade to Reach Jakarta Rally Site - Tempo.co English", which falls in the Moderate severity band.

Activity is being driven by sectoral chamber and union action and student and campus activism — several separate organising efforts that are harder for authorities to contain than a single-issue wave and that historically turn into rolling road action within 24-72 hours of an announced date.

Operationally, the pressure points to watch are city-centre commercial districts, court complexes, party headquarters, ministry quarters and the main intercity arteries. Staff movement, last-mile logistics and customer-facing footfall are the surfaces that feel the effect first; supply-chain friction from sectoral walkouts tracks one news cycle behind.

CIVIL UNREST AND PUBLIC ORDER READ

Little riot, clash, crackdown, curfew or security-force activity was reported across 14 Jun - 20 Jun 2026. A quiet stretch for civil unrest alongside continuing protest activity usually means the authorities have held back from mass arrests or curfew orders — useful, but it can reverse within days if a protest crosses a policy line.

Keep tracking police statements, local government orders, internet-shutdown notices and any move to call in the military. These tend to come ahead of curfews and visible street-level enforcement.

No civil unrest or public-order activity was reported this week.

FORECAST: NEXT 7-14 DAYS

COUNTRY	SIGNAL	OPERATIONAL MEANING
Indonesia	Civic protest march	Treat as leading indicator; confirm operating impact inside 24-48h.
Indonesia	Student-body mobilisation	Treat as leading indicator; confirm operating impact inside 24-48h.
New Zealand	Civic protest march	Treat as leading indicator; confirm operating impact inside 24-48h.
South Korea	Union injunction ruling — sectoral strike risk	Sectoral disruption pending court ruling; pre-position contingency supply.

Confirmed upcoming events are listed in the table above and are the first things to plan around for the next 7-14 days. The outlook below builds on that schedule.

Two different stories sit side by side here and should be read together. By volume, Indonesia sees the most activity and is the most likely source of repeated, lower-level disruption. For seriousness, the sharper concern is Philippines, where Student-body mobilisation (Manila) rated Extreme — less frequent but with more potential to escalate. More events is not the same as more dangerous ones: plan for widespread disruption across Indonesia and for sharper escalation in Philippines.

Protest activity dominates at the moment, so the most likely escalation path is from announced rallies and trade-group walkouts into intermittent road closures and city-centre disruption. Risk increases if security forces respond with mass arrests, tear gas or curfew orders; risk eases if organisers stand down voluntarily or political talks open.

A note of caution: a quiet stretch is not a lasting easing in these countries. A single political event can bring activity flooding back within 48 hours, so treat this outlook as a starting point rather than a firm prediction.

REGIONAL AND COUNTRY VIEW

This week activity spans South Asia (led by Bangladesh), East Asia (led by South Korea), Southeast Asia (led by Indonesia) and Pacific (led by Australia). It is genuinely regional rather than confined to any single sub-region; Indonesia sees the most activity but is not the whole story, and businesses with a presence across several APAC capitals should treat this as a coordinated rather than localised picture.

Indonesia — The busiest area this week, driven by protest alongside student activism. Likely form: announced rallies, sectoral walkouts and student-body actions converting into rolling road closures; main areas affected: university campuses, adjoining road networks and exam-board administrative offices.

South Korea — The second-busiest area this week, driven by protest alongside strike / labour action. Likely form: announced rallies, sectoral walkouts and student-body actions converting into rolling road closures; main areas affected: wholesale markets, transport corridors and sectoral premises (pharmacies, courts, hauliers).

Bangladesh — The third-busiest area this week, driven by protest alongside student activism. Likely form: announced rallies, sectoral walkouts and student-body actions converting into rolling road closures; main areas affected: university campuses, adjoining road networks and exam-board administrative offices.

Other APAC countries saw less activity this week and appear in the country chart below.

RECORDS BY COUNTRY (TOP 12)

WHAT MATTERS

What matters most this week is that activity is spread across South Asia, East Asia, Southeast Asia and Pacific rather than concentrated in a single capital. That kind of spread is harder to police, harder to predict and routinely turns into rolling, short-notice disruption across several countries in the same week. Indonesia sets the pace but is not the whole picture.

Activity this week leans toward protests rather than civil unrest, which usually means the authorities have held back from visible enforcement. That can change within days if a rally crosses a policy line.

IMPLICATIONS FOR BUSINESS

- Review staff movement plans and journey-management routings across Indonesia and the wider South Asia, East Asia, Southeast Asia and Pacific region against the live protest calendar.
- Set clear work-from-home or delayed-start triggers for offices, plants and customer-facing sites in affected cities.
- Confirm alternative routes for staff, visitors and delivery movements around courts, ministries, campuses and party offices.
- Harden site access controls, perimeter checks and visitor restrictions; pre-position guard reinforcement.
- Pre-approve staff, customer and regulator communications for disruption days so messages move in minutes, not hours.
- Monitor for Section 144 / curfew orders, mass arrests and internet-shutdown notices in cities of operation — these move ahead of visible street-level disruption.
- Wire procurement, distribution and customer-service into the security early-warning feed — the trade-group and union walkouts already reported routinely run 24-72 hours ahead of supply-chain friction.

WATCH NEXT

- Indonesia — Civic protest march: road closures and venue-access friction; brief drivers in advance.
- Indonesia — Student-body mobilisation: road closures and venue-access friction; brief drivers in advance.
- New Zealand — Civic protest march: road closures and venue-access friction; brief drivers in advance.
- South Korea — Union injunction ruling — sectoral strike risk: supply-chain friction and sectoral closures 24-72h ahead.
- Indonesia — the next dated opposition, trade-group or court call. As the busiest area this week, a fresh trigger here turns fastest into road closures and venue-access problems.
- Philippines — follow-through after Student-body mobilisation (Manila), the most serious incident reported: watch for retaliatory protests, further arrests or injuries within 48 hours.

POLESTAR VIEW

Polestar's view: the picture is broadly mobilised but not yet escalating. Several organising efforts are active; the authorities' response has stayed below visible enforcement so far.

Business disruption risk is moderate-to-elevated: short-notice transport disruption on protest days, closures of public-facing sites driven by Section 144 / curfew orders, and supply-chain friction from trade-group walkouts. The main remaining risk is a trigger — an adverse court ruling, a fuel-price decision, a security-force death — that tips this into sustained unrest.
